UN IMPOSES SANCTIONS ON NORTH KOREA OVER NUCLEAR PROGRAM

GETTY IMAGES

North Korea faces harsh new U.N. sanctions to starve it of money for its nuclear weapons program following a unanimous Security Council vote on a resolution drafted by the United States and Pyongyang's ally China. The resolution, which dramatically expands existing sanctions, follows North Korea's latest nuclear test on Jan. 6 and a Feb. 7 rocket launch that Washington and its allies said used banned ballistic missile technology. Pyongyang said it was a peaceful satellite launch. U.S. Ambassador Samantha Power said the sanctions go further than any U.N. sanctions regime in two decades and aim to cut off funds for North Korea's nuclear and other banned weapons programs. All cargo going to and from North Korea must now be inspected and North Korean trade representatives in Syria, Iran and Vietnam are among 16 individuals added to a U.N. blacklist, along with 12 North Korean entities. HUGE QUAKE STRIKES OFF INDONESIA

2 A massive quake struck Wednesday off the Indonesian island of Sumatra, a region devastated by the 2004 Indian Ocean quake and tsunami, but initial fears of another region-wide disaster faded as tsunami warnings were cancelled. Indonesian and Australian authorities called off their tsunami alerts within two hours of the 7.8 magnitude tremor, though it was still unclear if the quake had destroyed any buildings or killed people in Sumatra. A National Search and Rescue Agency official gave an initial report of some deaths, but later withdrew those comments. "Up until now, there is no information about deaths," said Heronimus Guru, the agency's deputy head of operations. REUTERS

US BANS THE USE OF E-CIGARETTES ON COMMERCIAL FLIGHTS

3 The U.S. Transportation Department announced Wednesday it has banned the use of electronic cigarettes on commercial flights. The rule applies to all scheduled flights by domestic and foreign carriers involving transportation in, to and from the United States, the department said in a statement. "This final rule is important because it protects airline passengers from unwanted exposure to aerosol fumes that occur when electronic cigarettes are used onboard airplanes," Transportation Secretary Anthony Foxx said. The Transportation Department said it took the action to eliminate any confusion over whether its existing ban on smoking on flights includes electronic cigarettes. REUTERS

SUV crashes into shop in Newton, kills two

Said a witness: "It sounded like a bomb went off."

SPENCER BUELL and JASON NUCKOLLS

A community was in mourning Wednesday after a speeding SUV crashed into a Newton restaurant, killing two people and injuring seven others.

As police continued to investigate, mourners placed flowers near the scene, where wooden boards had been erected in front of the eatery's glass, street-facing facade.

The car, driving at a high speed, was headed north on Chestnut Street and crossed Washington Street just after 6 p.m. when it smashed into the Sweet Tomatoes pizza restaurant, authorities told reporters.

Middlesex District Attorney Marian Ryan's office Wednesday evening identified the two victims killed in the crash as Gregory D. Morin, 32, of Newton, and Eleanor Miele, 57, of Watertown. Both were customers inside the restaurant at the time of the collision, according to a release.

Three customers sustained injuries: a 30-year-old man from Brockton as well as a man and woman, ages 44 and 35, from Newton.

Four employees were also injured: a 19-year-old woman from Marshfield, a 27-year-old woman from Waltham and two men from Dedham — one is 34, the other is 32.

Ryan identified the driver only as a 55-year-old man from Newton who was also injured in the crash. His license has been suspended, the release said.

Ryan's office, as well as state and local police are investigating. No charges have been filed.

The restaurant "sustained significant structural damage," the release said.

"It sounded like a bomb went off," a witness, who didn't want to be identified, told WCVB. "The building shook, and alarms started going off. People were screaming. They were hurt. We went inside, and we were pulling rubble and debris off of people."

According to family members who spoke with reporters, Miele — one of the two killed in the crash — had been picking up a pizza on her way to an Easter basket-packing event at a nearby church at the time of the collision, they said.

"I'm just heartbroken," Patricia Desmond, her sister-in-law, told WCVB. "[The driver] took a beautiful woman away. She was my little sister, and she was the best."

Andy Hochman, founding partner of the law firm where Miele worked for 12 years, told Metro the sudden death of a beloved employee has left "a void."

"She held things together for us in the office. She was a very, very generous person and a very good person," Hochman said. "She knew all of our clients — made it her business to get to know people. Just a real people person with a tremendous personality.

"We're going to have a void to fill," he said. "It's going to be tough."

In a tweet early Wednesday morning, the Newton Police Department shared a message of grief: "Our heartfelt thoughts and prayers to all the victims and their families in last night's tragedy."

In a statement on Facebook, Newton Mayor Setti Warren invited mourners to join him for a vigil near the Newton Police Headquarters at 1321 Washington Street in West Newton at 6:30 p.m. He said first responders and clergy would also be there for the ceremony.

"This tragedy has touched us all, and we are offering this event as an opportunity for our community to stand together in remembrance of the victims," Warren wrote.

A day to focus on manliness

The anti-domestic violence White Ribbon Day is approaching in Massachusetts, and this year's campaign is focusing on changing the conversation about manliness.

"Men's violence against women is gender-based violence, but it's one of many," said Craig Norberg-Bohm, coordinator for the Jane Doe Inc. Men's Initiative told Metro in an interview. "It's about how men treat each other — about masculinity, how you police or teach masculinity to one another."

The latest initiative is called Reimagine Manhood. To underscore the message, White Ribbon Day's organizers have called on athletes in particular to serve as role models. At a State House event Thursday to mark the occasion, Gov. Charlie Baker and other speakers will be joined by Andre Tippett, the former Patriots linebacker.

Norberg-Bohm said most men don't abuse their partners, and it's common for dads to teach their sons not to harm women. But that's not enough to end the problem, he said.

"We think of a frame called the 'man box,'" he said. "If you step out of it, you're called a derogatory name because you're not being a bully. … There's something in manhood that's part of the problem, and we want to have that conversation."

Preventing domestic violence and sexual assault isn't just about reaching abusers themselves, Norberg-Bohm said. "'I'm a big strong man' no longer means 'I get to take liberties with women,'" he said. "When a man says, 'We have to be respectful and equal in our relationships with women,' that challenges the social norm that we're privileged in those relationships."

Jane Doe, a coalition that aims to address domestic violence and sexual assault in the state, is among many groups working with men in schools and at community-based training sessions.

Various sports have become an essential part of reaching a wide audience, Norberg-Bohm said.

Last year, Patriots owner Bob Kraft teamed up with Attorney General Maura Healey to launch "Game Change," an education campaign for schools and coaches. Kraft pitched in $500,000 for the cause — Healey's office committed $150,000.

"I think we're making progress — the fact that national sports teams are beginning to respond," Norberg-Bohm said. "We know we're in the process of change."

Boston puppy mill bill clears City Council

Boston's City Council on Wednesday approved a city ordinance banning the sales of puppies, kittens and bunnies in stores.

The measure, sponsored by Councilor Matt O'Malley, has been dubbed the "puppy mill bill."

The ban is designed to fight back against breeders who raise animals in what O'Malley called "abhorrent conditions."

Boston would be the first municipality in the state to adopt such a ban, pending Mayor Marty Walsh's signature. More than 120 cities and towns nationwide have approved similar measures.

The ordinance would also make it illegal to sell animals in public places like parks or on the sidewalk.

The Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals-Angell, based in Jamaica Plain, applauded Wednesday's vote.

"The MSPCA-Angell is incredibly pleased to see the ordinance pass because the measure will have an immediate and significant impact on our adoption center in Boston, which already has experienced a 50 percent rise in rabbit surrenders in the last year alone," MSPCA spokesman Rob Halpin said in a statement. "The MSPCA commends the City Council for its vote, which will not only reduce the number of pets who end up in animal shelters, but the number of sick pets as well."

Councilors carved out an exception to the ordinance until 2017 for Allston's The Pet Store, which breeds rabbits, according to UniversalHub.

No other pet stores currently sell animals in the city.

The ban would give authorities the power to seize animals and issue fines of up to $300, UniversalHub reported.

Carson appears set to drop out of presidential race

Retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson appeared set to end his bid for the 2016 Republican presidential nomination Wednesday after failing to win a single state despite a short-lived surge of support last fall in the early-voting state of Iowa.

"I do not see a political path forward in light of last evening's Super Tuesday primary results," Carson said in a statement. He said he would also skip the next Republican debate, scheduled for Thursday night in Detroit.

Carson signaled his withdrawal after candidate Donald Trump consolidated his lead in the Republican race with a string of victories on Tuesday, but failed to eclipse his rivals or draw reluctant party leaders into his corner.

Carson drew the national spotlight to him in October when he pushed past Trump among party voters in some opinion polls in Iowa, which kicked off the state-by-state presidential nominating contests in February.

But he saw his support drop after a series of missteps in some of his comments about national security in the aftermath of the attacks in San Bernardino, California, and Paris.

Carson's withdrawal would leave four candidates vying to be the Republican nominee in the Nov. 8 election to replace Democratic President Barack Obama, winnowing down a field that was once crowded and is now clearly dominated by Trump. REUTERS

Possible missing Malaysia Airlines flight MH370 debris found near Africa

The only piece of the missing airliner recovered thus far has been a wing flap that was found off Reunion Island.

A man looks at Malaysia Airlines' aircraft parked on the tarmac. GETTY IMAGES

The fate behind Malaysia Airline Flight MH370 still remains a strong mystery as once again debris — believed to be part of a Boeing 777 jet — was discovered over the weekend and is being examined to determine if it belonged to the missing airliner.

The piece of wreckage, which measured 35 inches by 22 inches, is a piece of horizontal stabilizer skin that is part of an aircraft's tail, according to CNN.

The debris was found washed ashore on the coast of Mozambique by American tourist Blaine Gibson and a local fisherman, a Mozambican official told CNN. Officials were made aware of the discovery Monday and the wreckage was handed over to Mozambique authorities.

Gibson, according to NBC News, had been blogging about the search for MH370 during the time of the discovery.

Liow Tiong Lai, Malaysia's transport minister, said there is a "high possibility" that the piece of debris belonged to a 777 jet but added he could not conclude yet that it was from the missing Malaysia Airlines jetliner, according to Reuters.

"It is yet to be confirmed and verified. … I urge everyone to avoid undue speculation as we are not able to conclude that the debris belongs to MH370 at this time," Liow said on his Twitter account.

The fragment was being flown to the capital Maputo from Inhambane province and would arrive on Wednesday evening. It would be examined in Maputo by Malaysian and U.S. experts, Reuters reported.

An aviation source told CNN that there is no record of any Boeing 777 missing other than the ill-fated Malaysia Airline Flight MH370 — which disappeared almost two years ago on March 8, 2014.

However, Malaysia Airlines said that "it is too speculative at this point" to comment on the matter of the debris, CNN reported.

According to NBC News, this recent piece of wreckage was discovered in the same corner of the southern Indian Ocean where authorities last year confirmed a six-foot-long wing flap belonging to MH370 was found. It reportedly took French aviation experts more than a month to make the confirmation.

Earlier this year, debris that was found in Thailand was ruled out as belonging to the missing airliner, NBC News added.

Malaysia Airline Flight MH370 is considered one of aviation's greatest mysteries after it vanished — with 239 on board — in the early morning of March 8 while in route from Kuala Lumpur to Beijing.

At about 1:19 a.m. Malaysian air traffic controllers radioed the crew on the flight to contact controllers in Ho Chi Minh City as the plane made its way through Vietnamese airspace, CNN reported.

A response from the crew saying "Good night Malaysian three-seven-zero" was the last contact anyone had with the flight before air traffic controllers lost contact with the plane over water between Malaysia and Vietnam.

Authorities later announced that military radar, according to CNN, had tracked the plane as it changed course. The flight was seen turning back to the west and flying across the Malaysian Peninsula before flying out of range at 2:14 a.m.

Close to three-quarters of a 46,000 square mile search zone of ocean floor has been covered in the investigation for MH370. ANGY ALTAMIRANO

Another debate brawl? Fox News, Megyn Kelly set for Trump rematch

The brash billionaire's unfiltered style has helped generate unprecedented ratings for news networks including Fox.

Thursday's Republican debate on Fox News Channel could be Round 2 of Megyn Kelly versus Donald Trump. But the journalist and fellow moderators say they are not preparing to stoke the fire with questions about his headline-grabbing battles with the network.

Trump accused Kelly of lobbing him tougher questions than those directed at his rivals in an August debate that was the Republican candidates' first televised encounter. Kelly asked about Trump's remarks about women, prompting a stream of attacks from the candidate, who skipped a Fox debate in January.

"Frankly, I have been ready for seven months to move beyond what happened after that August debate," Kelly said in a recent interview. "I feel like it's getting boring. Trump has bigger things to worry about, and so do I."

The cable channel's August debate attracted 24 million viewers, a record for a presidential primary debate on any network, according to Nielsen. The January forum without Trump drew 12.5 million, still the second-largest audience in the network's history.

Donald Trump

Trump is set to appear at Thursday's rematch with Fox News anchors Kelly, Bret Baier and Chris Wallace. "Mr. Trump will be at the debate tomorrow and looks forward to participating," spokeswoman Hope Hicks said on Wednesday.

The moderators said they do not plan to mention Trump's comments about Kelly, his complaints about unfair treatment by the cable news network or his absence from Fox's January debate.

Kelly said she has not prepared a comeback if Trump gets personal. "I have my questions," she said. "That's all I need."

Last week's debate on Time Warner Inc.'s CNN turned into a raucous match where rivals Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio ganged up on Trump, who fired back. Wallace called it an "embarrassment" to Republicans.

The three "seemed hell-bent on taking out each other on a lot of fairly minor points," he said, "rather than discussing issues that affect people's lives."

On Tuesday, Trump and Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton took big steps toward securing their parties' nominations with a series of state-by-state victories.

Christie slammed on social media

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie took a drubbing on social media for his demeanor in an appearance with Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump at a televised victory speech and news conference on Super Tuesday.

Some questioned whether Christie's enthusiasm was genuine following his appearance at Trump's event in Palm Beach, Florida, on Tuesday night.

Kim Kardashian's past comes back to haunt her

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Kim Kardashian found herself hit with a lawsuit this week by a California man who claims he was injured in a car accident caused by the reality star and website and app proprietress. Here's the thing, though: The collision happened in March 2014. But better late than never, right? During the accident in question way back when, Kardashian reportedly turned left at an intersection when the man, Rafael Linares, was going straight. While the parties talked things over and went their separate ways after sharing a hug — and avoiding any tickets — the lawsuit charges that Linares "sustained personal injuries which caused and will continue to cause pain, discomfort and physical disability." So I guess that hug wasn't quite enough. Should've offered a selfie, too.

Kanye West outs himself as a torrent fan

This is probably going to make it hard for Kanye West to complain about the more than 500,000 people who have illegally downloaded his new album, "The Life of Pablo." West tweeted a photo this week — with the vague caption "Day 3" — that included a photo of his computer monitor open to a YouTube video of a Sufjan Stevens song. Which is fine. Lots of people use YouTube as a de facto music-streaming site. But it was the other tabs he had open that raised concern — specifically one for notorious file-sharing site the Pirate Bay and another listed as "MediaDownloader." Man, don't you know to always check your tabs before letting people see your desktop? Awkward.

Ra Ra Riot just wants to put on a house party

The band goes back to their roots.

CHRIS LEO PALERMINO
@indiecalp
letters@metro.us

After three records, Ra Ra Riot hit a fork in the road. The group's last effort, "Beta Love," embraced electronic dance music for the first time — and emotionally drained the group best known for violin-laced melodic chamber pop. Rather than burning out, vocalist Wes Miles and his band realized they had to make some changes.

"We wanted to reconnect with all of the things that we felt when we were first starting, when we were a house party band," says Miles. In order to channel this youthful vibe to make the indie rockers' new record "Need Your Light," (released in February from Barsuk Records) the five-piece had a solution: Simply play some house shows.

"Before we even went into the studio, we did a little house party tour in fall 2014 and we connected with the same people that were at our first shows," says Miles. "We brought that energy into the studio this time more than ever."

The result? A 10-song album that ties infectious, stadium-ready dance pop songs with quirky rock cuts. On one side of the spectrum, encore-ready electro jams like "Absolutely" and "Every Time I'm Ready to Hug" invite the listener to jump for joy. On the other side, the title track and "Water" — with production help from former Vampire Weekend guitarist Rostam Batmanglij — dive into the group's expansive, string-laden rock roots.

While '80s synth vibes are most noticeable on the record, Miles also noted influences from Kate Bush, Brian Eno, Soul II Soul, Janet Jackson, and one particular record: U2's adventurous 1991 LP "Achtung Baby." "That's one thing that Rostam and I bonded over a lot and within the band, too," says Miles. "It's one of our favorite records."

Glam rocker "Bouncy Castle," about a kid associating sexual desires with lust for the first time, is most representative of Ra Ra Riot's newfound lighthearted side. "I never would've written [it] when we first started because it's just so silly," explains Miles. "To get in touch with the more energetic and raucous side, we had to let some of those silly things stand."

Embracing this silliness may be the key to a long future for the group that formed a decade ago in college at Syracuse University. "It's encouraging for the future that we can find ways to take the pressure off but still be excited about working together," says Miles.

Boston chefs weigh in on their Dine Out menus

We asked three new additions to the Dine Out playbook what they're serving this time around.

LINDA CLARKE
letters@metro.us

With 18 restaurants debuting at Dine Out Boston, this year's prix fixe menu promo promises to be a showcase of what to try next. Running Sunday to Friday, March 6-11 and 13-18, Dine Out challenges chefs to create multi-course menus at three pricing tiers for lunch ($15, $20, $25) and/or dinner ($28, $33, $38). That's quite a budgeting task for the discerning cook. We spoke to three chefs bringing their new restaurants into this year's Dine Out, who aren't dumbing down dishes to fit the price. Instead, they're cooking to impress.

Opened last fall in The Envoy Hotel on Northern Boulevard, Outlook Kitchen and Bar's Dine Out debut includes a two-course lunch and three-course dinner ($20, $38).

"I don't change the menu to fit a price structure. I don't want to take from the integrity of the dishes by using cheaper ingredients," says Chef David Verdo, who took part in Dine Out at his previous restaurant, the suburban hidden gem Chopps in Burlington. With a dinner menu that embellishes cod loin with a ginger-shiitake broth, and Aspen Ridge flat iron steak with New England hedgehog mushrooms and first-of-the-season pea shoots, bright flavors are brought to life: "With spring just around the corner, I wanted to create light, aromatic dishes," he adds.

At Sfizi in the North End, Chef Gianni Caruso is discounting most of the regular classic Italian and pan-Mediterranean inspired menu for a three-course dinner ($33): "Popular homemade dishes is what we're about. We'll embrace our Italian roots and include a selection of dishes that shows who we are."

Those include zucchini blossoms stuffed with truffled mozzarella, angel hair pasta with seafood, New England swordfish with sweet potato puree and smoked shrimp, and a luscious tiramisu. "We don't look at cost for this, so this is very good value," Caruso explains. "This is an opportunity for sharing our menu with people who don't know Sfizi. We want people to fall in love with our restaurant and come back again, and share with friends."

Chef Tom Borgia's Dine Out menu for FiDi's new State Street Provisions keeps it simple: a two-course appetizer and entrée dinner menu ($28) with the option of beer or wine pairing ($12). The sweet-toothed can choose from the regular menu's ample selection.

Borgia also worked season-forward with a spring vegetable minestrone, and beet tagliatelle with shaved asparagus, roasted oyster mushrooms and mascarpone. "Spring is the most difficult season because it's the shortest and everyone tries to hit that window when fava beans, young asparagus, morels and ramps are at their best," says Borgia, a Dine Out veteran from his tenure at sister restaurant Russell House Tavern in Harvard Square.

"It's hard to be cost effective at these prices, so I say to hell with it. It's more important for me to work within the restaurant's framework of being seasonal and local, and celebrate New England."

The Core Theatre presents this historical drama by James Hanson Price, telling the story of the 1942 fire at the popular Boston nightclub Cocoanut Grove. The tragedy claimed the lives of 492 people and briefly eclipsed World War II in the national headlines. Almost forgotten today, the horrifying event led to greater safety standards and innovations in the treatment of burn victims.

Bridge Repertory Theater presents this topical play by local playwright MJ Halberstadt, about a quartet of art students competing for the titular career-making award. Each was allowed to reveal or withhold their racial and gender identifies. Without yet knowing the winner, the artists debate whether or not the contest is biased. Is any contest fair in an unequal society?

4 Breweries where you can spend the night

They are a beer lover's ideal vacation.

Fodor's Travel

Your friends would love a brewery sleepover. ISTOCK

Wine-focused tourism is nothing new, but these days, travelers with a taste for barley and hops are increasingly seeking out "beercations." From popular festivals to ale trails to one-of-a-kind spa packages, beer is inspiring the kind of travel adventures that were once reserved for oenophiles; now, a new trend is popping up: brewery sleepovers. We've rounded up five suds-loving spots around the country where you can raise a glass — and then rest your head.

Dogfish Inn

Lewes, Delaware
While not actually located in a brewery, the Dogfish Inn, a restored 16-room motel turned beer-themed hotel from the folks at Dogfish Head, does make visiting the nearby craft brewery much easier. Nestled along a canal in the historic town of Lewes (pronounced "Lewis"), near a beautiful state park, the property offers bikes for guests to use along the coastal trails, outdoor showers for post-beach rinses and a "Cowboy Cauldron" for oyster roasts. They didn't forget the beer: The All-INNclusive package includes a private, behind-the-scenes tour of the brewery, a VIP tasting and lunch at the company's brewpub.

McMenamins Edgefield

Troutdale, Oregon
Craft-brewing pioneers and brothers Mike and Brian McMenamin opened their first Oregon pub in 1974.

Dogfish Inn DOGFISH INN

Now, their beer-centric empire includes restaurants, music venues and hotels throughout the Pacific Northwest. Twenty minutes outside of Portland, McMenamins Edgefield has it all: more than 100 guest rooms, a brewery, winery, distillery, spa and even an outdoor music venue that's featured Stevie Wonder and Adele. The former farm-turned-resort also has several restaurants, a movie theater and two par-3 golf courses.

Woodstock Inn Station & Brewery

North Woodstock, New Hampshire
The Woodstock Inn Station & Brewery, located near Dartmouth College and the White Mountain National Forest, is home to a restaurant, several brewpubs and an on-site brewery. The 40 guest rooms are spread throughout six buildings in downtown North Woodstock, six directly above the brewery. Daily brewery tours are available, but the Brewer's Weekends offer a more immersive experience, during which guests learn how to mash, boil, ferment and keg beer before a multicourse beer-pairing dinner.

Calistoga Inn Restaurant & Brewery

Calistoga, California
This 18-room, European-style hotel (think shared bathrooms) in the heart of Napa wine country added a small brewery in 1987. At that point, the Calistoga Inn & Brewery became the first spot in Napa County to brew beer commercially since Prohibition ended. Four regular brews — an American wheat ale, Czech-style pilsner, a red ale and porter — and seasonal offerings are on tap at the property's two pubs. Brewery tours are available with the inn's brewmaster on weekdays. KELLY DINARDO

Like Bill Nye, this comedian has a background in science — before he got the comedy bug, he was studying population dynamics as a biologist, and his bio describes his PowerPoint-driven stand-up act "a cross between your high school chemistry teacher and George Carlin." It'll satisfy both your left and right brains.

This Los Angeles outfit started out as a classic basement punk act, but they've since taken a direction many early punks did, toward moody, synth-assisted pop, recalling the danceable melancholy of the Smiths or New Order. This newer sound comes into full flower on their new album, "Blows," which, if you didn't know better, you might guess was from 1983.

Sports legal expert Jason Bonk weighs in on what to expect Thursday afternoon.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Tom Brady's legal team and the NFL will be back in court in New York on Thursday at 2 p.m. as the NFL will appeal Judge Richard Berman's decision to vacate Tom Brady's four-game suspension for being "generally aware" of a conspiracy to deflate footballs in last year's AFC Championship Game. Metro spoke with sports legal expert and Cozen O'Connor litigator Jason Bonk about what could — finally — be the conclusion of the Deflategate saga.

The timeline

The three judges have already been presented with detailed arguments from both sides. Brady's team and the NFL's team will both argue for around 15 minutes each. Judges have the opportunity to interject during arguments and typically do, according to Bonk.

A decision is not expected for months.

The judges

Two of the three judges are liberal judges, and liberal judges typically rule in favor of labor (in this case, Brady). The winning side needs two of the three judges to agree on a ruling. It's majority, not unanimous.

What will they argue?

The NFL will again hammer the CBA and say that Berman did not apply the law properly in his ruling. In the agreement reached between the NFL and NFL Players' Association, Commissioner Roger Goodell had full right to do what he did in terms of the hearing process, league investigation and discipline — the NFL will argue.

"Appellate expert" Paul Clement is now the NFL's lead attorney.

Brady's team will argue on behalf of Berman's decision, which slammed the NFL's so-called "independent investigation" and Goodell's decision to rule on the matter himself.

Bonk's prediction

"The NFL compared Brady's violation to PEDs, which looks even worse now with Peyton Manning in the news [for alleged HGH use]," Bonk said. "There has to be a clear error by Judge Berman, and it's just not there. I predict that the judges will affirm. Judge Berman's decision was carefully crafted. Berman talked about the unfairness and the evidence that was excluded — primarily the issue of Jeff Pash editing the Wells Report. I think that obviates the idea of clear error [by Judge Berman].

"Judge Berman is well regarded and you have two liberals on a three-person panel. That said, if it was reversed and Berman ruled in favor of the NFL and the CBA [originally], I would say Brady would have no chance of winning at the appeal level."

If the NFL "loses," will they take it to the Supreme Court?

"The Supreme Court turns down hearings all the time. It's not going to the Supreme Court. If it does, I don't know if I believe in being a lawyer anymore [laughs]."

Aries A disciplined approach is in your best interest. Whether you are helping someone or making personal improvements, a positive state of mind will be essential.

Taurus Offering assistance is honorable, but don't let anyone take you for granted. Use your knowledge and attributes to further your endeavors, not someone else's ideas.

Gemini There will be a fine line between right and wrong. Weigh the pros and cons of a situation and make decisions based on the most likely outcome.

Cancer An unusual encounter will leave you questioning your life and goals. A receptive attitude toward those who have something different to offer will help you make a positive change.

Leo Alter the way you earn your living or take on a new venture that will supplement your income and help you decrease your debt. Don't be tricked into investing in a fast-cash scheme.

Virgo Criticism is best avoided. Whether you are dishing it out or on the receiving end, no one will benefit. Positive support will resolve matters and lead to better days ahead.

Libra Share your ideas and take part in events that are geared toward unusual encounters. Romance is on the rise, and making a personal decision will pay off.

Scorpio Listen to others, but make your own choices. It's in your best interest to keep the peace as well as be true to the endeavors you want to pursue. An unusual offer will be made.

Sagittarius Don't let a hopeless idea lead you on a wild goose chase. Show some practicality or you will end up losing out. Base your decisions on facts. Romance is encouraged.

Capricorn Don't let unexpected changes disrupt your plans. Concentrate on what needs to be done in order to reach your destination. Don't be afraid to take a different path.

Aquarius It's a good day to stick close to home and avoid any run-ins with others. With a little extra time and effort, a personal project can be completed. Spruce up your looks or attitude.

Pisces Don't push your luck. Be attentive and observant in order to avoid ending up in a compromising position. If you work with the current, you will come out ahead. EUGENIA LAST
